Nathan's Notes...

It seems like this year has flown by. We are already less than 3 months from 2027 and have spent three quarters of our time on the theme of "In This Together". My hope is that the topics we've discussed have helped people in this church to think more deeply and care more sincerely about their relationship to others, especially other believers.

Today we are beginning the last series that I wanted to prioritize this year: "Dealing with Difficult People". It's no surprise that we all have to deal with challenging individuals at times. Sometimes at work, church, or even in our own families (this series comes just in time before Thanksgiving). But if we're being honest, we'd rather not deal with them at all. Wouldn't life be easier if we could just shut the difficult people out and not have to interact with them anymore? After all, that is the trend in today's world, isn't it? Just label anyone you'd rather not deal with as "toxic" and avoid all situations where you might run into them. However, the Biblical approach would seem to be very different.

Over the next few weeks we'll talk about the Bible's advice on how to deal with difficult people, starting today with difficult people in your own church.
